Rosemère High science teacher receives Prime Minister's Award

Sir Wilfrid Laurier School Board pays homage to Andrea Venditti

“Is one of only seven teachers in Quebec to have received the Prime Minister’s Award for Teaching Excellence”

MARTIN C. BARRY

On May 25 during the Sir Wilfrid Laurier School Board’s last regular public meeting before the summer break, board chairwoman Jennifer Maccarone and other SWLSB officials paid tribute to a member of the Rosemère High School teaching staff who recently received a Prime Minister’s Award for Teaching Excellence.

Helped prepare students

At board headquarters in Rosemère, Andrea Venditti, an RHS secondary 4 and 5 science, technology and physics teacher, was congratulated by Maccarone, as well as the SWLSB’s interim director-general Frederic Greschner and board commissioner for Ward 4 Ann McMullon.

The Prime Minister’s Awards for Teaching Excellence have honored exceptional elementary and secondary school teachers in all disciplines since 1993, with almost 1,500 teachers honored to date. Recipients are honored for their remarkable achievements in education and for their commitment to preparing their students for a digital and innovation-based economy.

Inspires curiosity

Venditti, who has been teaching at RHS for the past 15 years and who is an RHS graduate, is one of only seven teachers in Quebec to have received the distinction. According to a profile of Venditti from the SWLSB, she firmly believes that all students can learn, and it is this belief that drives her to engage students with hands-on learning, inspiring their curiosity and exhorting them not only to ask how things work but also why.

Among her outstanding achievements, according to the profile, she wrote physics workbooks that are now available to teachers across Quebec. She also helped develop a study guide for teachers to prepare students for the secondary four science exam. In addition, she runs after-school tutorials for students struggling to pass the provincial science exam.

Very active teaching

Venditti has also been involved in preparing and validating exams for a wide range of science courses, and she acts as guest teacher at a local elementary school to introduce young learners to higher level science. As well, Venditti has developed workshops to show local Brownies and Girl Guides the wonders of science, while helping them earn badges.

MNAs want Quebec health minister to take action

(NSN) The Laurentian region’s CAQ MNAs are asking Quebec’s health minister to do something about the chronic shortage of radiologists in the area, since they say the situation poses a danger to public health.

According to the CAQ, a backlog of thousands of unread x-rays and other medical images are accumulating in the offices of doctors in the Laurentian region. In Lachute alone, they say there’s a backlog of 2,800 diagnostic images and a waiting list five months long.

Radiologists needed

The CAQ maintains that the Laurentians have suffered from a shortage of radiologists for nearly a year. In all, says Deux-Montagnes CAQ MNA Benoit Charette, 10,500 patients now must wait several months for an x-ray diagnostic.

“The health minister must find and quickly appoint permanent radiologists to replace those who have left. The health and security of patients demand it,” he said in a statement. CAQ MNA for Mirabel Sylvie D’Amours agreed the situation is unacceptable.

Goals unmet, says CAQ

“The minister of health set goals for family doctors for them to see more orphan patients between now and December 2017,” she said. “But can he do that with his colleague radiologists to eliminate waiting lists in the Laurentians? The numbers are shocking: it can take up to 154 days in Lachute, 96 in Mont-Laurier and 71 in Saint-Jérôme.”

Mario Laframboise, the CAQ MNA for the riding of Blainville, noted that for the past two years, the CISSS des Laurentides has reported a shortage of two radiologists to meet its needs. “Even if the doctors in Saint-Jérôme come to help out for the most urgent cases, the situation can not go on,” he said. “The minister can’t go on ignoring the facts much longer.”

Some going private

According to CAQ MNA for Groulx Claude Surprenant, unread diagnostic images are just one problem among many health issues in the Laurentians. In the region, he said, 19,000 patients are waiting to receive a diagnostic imaging examination.

“While the patients are waiting, the minister remains determined to not respect his promise to reimburse those who go private to get a scan, a magnetic resonance imaging examination or an ultrasound,” he said. “And yet he could do it right away.” ■

Health-care spending increases point to unsustainable future

Provincial governments need to start re-examining how their health-care dollars are spent or implementing meaningful health-care reform now

Health care is the single largest budget item for every provincial government in Canada. Increases in spending on health care can therefore have a significant impact on resources available for other government programs (such as education and social services), the tax system, and the government's fiscal balance and debt.

Based on the historical trends observed over the last 15 years or so, in addition to expectations regarding inflation and a growing (and ageing) population, health-care spending is projected to consume an increasing portion of both program spending and the economy.

A new study by the Fraser Institute estimates that, across Canada, health-care spending by provincial governments will grow from consuming 40.6 per cent of total program spending (in 2015) to 47.6 per cent (in 2030). By comparison, health care represented 34.4 per cent of program spending in 1998.

While every province is expected to see health-care spending consume a larger portion of their budget in the future, five provinces (P.E.I., Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Ontario and British Columbia) will see health spending grow close to or exceed 50 per cent of total program spending. Only Quebec and Saskatchewan are expected to keep health-care spending under 40 per cent of total program spending.

Trudeau government's next challenge: taking Australia's refugees?

The debate that has been raging since last year over the issue of what to do with the hundreds of thousands of refugees fleeing Syria and the Middle East is taking on overtones reminiscent of the buck passing that was characteristic of the world's attitude towards Jewish refugees fleeing Europe before World War II and the Holocaust that followed.

Refugee crises, which send large waves of people into new global regions, test not only our capacity for tolerance. History tells us they're also a testing ground for hateful political ideas and ideologies. Political leaders, who see growing public impatience over rising numbers of new immigrants, will sometimes seize on opportunities to promote intolerance, while offering to close our borders to people fleeing tyranny and crushing economic hardship.

Australia, which is currently undergoing some political turmoil of its own over the acceptance of refugees, is apparently on the verge of making a formal request to send a large number of its asylum seekers to Canada, a country which has already accepted and resettled more than 25,000 such people. Australia is in the midst of a federal election campaign in which the refugee question has become a central issue.

With right-wing anti-refugee sentiment growing in Europe, and with voters in the United States poised to decide whether they too want to go that route by voting headline and protectionist presidential candidate Donald Trump into office, the global refugee defence movement has turned to Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau as the upholder of like-minded values.

In Australia, where measures to deal with refugee-acceptance predate the Syrian crisis by more than 15 years, Australian Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull remains unmoved by widespread reports of the treatment of more than 1,000 asylum seekers who have been detained for years in camps on islands thousands of kilometres off the Australian coast where the living conditions were described by Amnesty International as "tantamount to torture."

After an Iranian man and a Somali woman set themselves on fire in protest in an Australian detention camp recently, Turnbull is reported to have said that Australians "cannot be misty-eyed about this." He persisted with the headline, which has since been adopted by all other mainstream Australian political parties.

When Marine Le Pen, leader of France's far-right anti-immigration National Front party paid a visit to Quebec in March, it was clear in her remarks that she was trying to stir up global approval for the National Front's intolerance – much in the way that the Fascists and Nazis of a bygone era tried to forge a global common front.

What was also clear was that she was telling the Trudeau government, on its own territory and in clear defiance of accepted diplomacy, what it should be doing. During her visit, Le Pen said Canada is on the wrong path with its immigration policy. She described the federal Liberal government's decisions on immigration, particularly its welcoming of Syrian refugees, as "erroneous."

She also said that Canada's political leaders have shown little regard for the consequences of their decisions, and that these could include accelerating the demands of religious minorities, such as providing space for prayer, or the establishment of religious courts. "A multicultural society is a society in conflict," the French politician said.

As we consider strategy for the current refugee crisis, let us not forget how most of the world reacted in the late 1930s to the waves of Jewish immigration which became inevitable because of discriminatory, racist and anti-Semitic policies in most of Europe. Nazi Germany profited from the actions of nations – including Canada – that refused Jewish refugees. They ended up agreeing inadvertently with Fascist ideology.

Canada is a country which has grown strong on its policies which generally are welcoming and encouraging towards immigrants. The position is based on an overall view that generosity tends to breed loyalty in those we take in. Should the Trudeau government waver in this commitment to continue upholding the principles which define our immigration policy, it would be a betrayal of the spirit of openness which is a fundamental component of the Canadian identity.

Rosemère mayor Madeleine Leduc contemplates running again

Town's voters go to the polls in November next year

PHOTOS: Martin C. Barry - Newsfirst

MARTIN C. BARRY

Speaking to the North Shore News last week shortly before a welcoming ceremony for new Rosemère residents, Mayor Madeleine Leduc said that although she is waiting to finish the work left during her current term in office, she is thinking of running for mayor again in the November 2017 election.

Would seek a third term

First elected a member of council in a 2008 by-election, then as mayor in another by-election in 2012 following the resignation of former mayor Hélène Daneault, Leduc was re-elected mayor in the general municipal election in 2013, although she faced some tougher competition that time around.

In an apparent uprising involving some members of the town council, Councillor Pierre Roussel, a long-time council veteran who served under three previous mayors, was a front-runner among those seeking the mayoralty.

Roussel succeeded in persuading an incumbent council member, Normand Bleau, to join him as a running mate. Two other candidates, Sylvain Arsenault and Sam Scuccimarri, also ran for mayor in 2013, but finished poorly. Arsenault had previously run against Leduc for the council seat in 2008.

Meets the residents

During the event to welcome the new Rosemèrites (during which there was no mention at all of politics), refreshments were served and those attending had the opportunity to speak with and touch base with the mayor and members of town council. As well, each of the new residents was handed a gift sac with the Town of Rosemère logo, containing useful items and information on the town's various services.

In a prepared speech, Mayor Leduc noted that since last year 212 new families have settled in Rosemère where the population stands at 14,400 and includes 5,000 households. "This event is a very nice tradition that town council continues," she said.

She also noted that Rosemère also has a widespread reputation for private and public landscaping which earned the town a Five Flower award designation in the Fleurons du Québec municipal landscaping competition last November. Rosemère is only the third municipality to receive the prestigious and highly-sought honor.

Town's summer activities

At the same time, Leduc pointed out that with the onset of summer vacation time, Rosemère's culture, sports and library departments are offering a wide range of programs between during July and August designed with families in mind. Information on them is available in the recreation department's brochure.

"I would also like to remind you that the Town of Rosemère will be going ahead with the implementation of a compostable materials collection starting next Sept. 12," she continued. "This initiative is part of the environmental values of the town. You will see over the course of the summer the implementation of an information campaign to make residents more aware of the details of the collection."

Leduc also reminded the newcomers that she meets all interested residents once each month on Saturdays when anyone with questions or complaints can bring them to her. "It will be a pleasure for one of the members of town council and myself to answer your questions," she said, noting that the next such meeting before the summer holidays is on June 18. ■

"More than 200 new families came to live in Rosemère over the past year"

Rosemère's Maison Hamilton is one of the town's most cherished cultural and heritage institutions.

Rosemère mayor Madeleine Leduc addresses new town residents at the Hamilton House cultural centre last week.

Gift sacs like these with the Town of Rosemère's logo on them were given to new residents who were greeted by the mayor and council last week.

FATHER'S DAY • JUNE 19, 2016

DAD

FIRST HERO
A daughter's
FIRST LOVE

Many thanks to a wonderful dad

Every year, we dedicate the third Sunday of June to our beloved fathers. And with good reason; Dad played many different roles on a daily basis, and often still does. Whether he's playing superhero, protector, adviser, confidant, nurse, cook or taxi driver, his only goal has always been our well-being and happiness.

A constant presence in our lives, he repeatedly puts aside his own needs in order to make us happy, help us and encourage us. He's given us unforgettable memories, from little nothings to the greatest moments. He taught us his solid values, spent countless hours with us and, above all, loved us fiercely from the first time he laid eyes on us.

Because of all this, one day isn't really enough to express all our love and gratitude, is it? However, Father's Day is still the perfect opportunity to spend quality time with this man who has played such an important role in our lives. Let's make the most of this occasion to say "thank you" and "I love you," words that warm the heart even more than the most wonderful gift.

And yet, why not take the opportunity to spoil him in turn? After all, as "world's best dad," he deserves it. What would thrill your father: a new tool or techie gadget? A book or a CD? Tickets for a show or a restaurant meal? A slideshow of family photos or some sports equipment? One thing's for sure: whatever his tastes, he'll really appreciate spending quality time with you, creating even more unforgettable memories.

*Father's Day is the perfect opportunity to say "thank you" and "I love you"
to your wonderful dad.*

Hundreds come out for Deux-Montagnes' Horticultural Day

City promotes beautification with flower and plant give-away

MARTIN C. BARRY

If you're a resident of the City of Deux-Montagnes with a fondness for colorful petals and green leaves, the place to be on Saturday May 28 was at the public works garage at the top of 20th Avenue.

There, elected officials were on hand, with the assistance of volunteers and city employees, to give out hundreds of shrubs and plants the better to beautify the municipality.

Early bird special

During the city's 11th annual Horticultural Day, the North Shore News (not being much of an early riser, burning the candle at both ends into the night as we frequently do), got there by late morning, which was a few hours after the early birds had gotten the worm, as they say.

All the same, free for the asking for anyone who could prove residency were annual flowers and perennial plants, young tree shoots and gardening advice from experts.

Councillors' greetings

"We haven't done the count yet, but there's been several hundred people through already," said du Coteau district councillor Michel Mendes who helped orient arriving residents along with his colleagues. "This morning there were people waiting outside well before 9 o'clock when we opened," he added.

"An event like this helps to beautify Deux-Montagnes while bringing the people together," said Mayor Denis Martin. "This morning, people who haven't seen each other for a long time have been chatting. At the same time, this is giving us a chance to promote our activities for the summer. We have a lot of things happening and we want people to know about them."

Taking home some green

Among those who took advantage of the offer were Elizabeth Powell and her friend Julie Rekunyk. "I used to come, but haven't been here for this in the last few years, and this is a nice offer from the city," Powell told us. Like the others, she would leave with a few potted plants which would be taking up residency on her property.

Again this year, the Caisse Desjardins Saint-Eustache/Deux-Montagnes offered some generous financial support as a senior partner in Horticultural Day. The City was also pleased that it was able to count on the collaboration of many volunteers, including the Scouts Coalition of Grand-Moulin (5th group) and representatives of the Deux-Montagnes Lions' Club.

Free planting advice

Also, for citizens who have a green thumb or simply have an interest in gardening, the city is extending an invitation to them to visit the Deux-Montagnes website (<http://www.ville.deux-montagnes.qc.ca/>) for some general gardening tips (although they are available in French only). And if you enjoy beautiful landscaping and would like to get involved this summer in the City of Deux-Montagnes' Beautification Committee, you are also invited to contact the Horticulture Department at 450 473-4688 ext. 31.

On Saturday June 11 the city will be holding another significant and very local community event: the second annual Fête des Voisins, which is taking place in various parks throughout Deux-Montagnes. While the mayor will be spending some time at each of the parks, the councillors will be present at parks in their districts throughout the day. ■

Deux-Montagnes residents Elizabeth Powell and Julie Rekunyk received their plants at the municipal yards on the recent Horticultural Day.

During Horticultural Day, Deux-Montagnes mayor Denis Martin was on hand to greet two residents, Elizabeth Powell, right, and her friend Julie Rekunyk, who returned home with two potted plants each.

Justin Trudeau's Liberals hold support from post-election honeymoon

Liberals holding steady, well above their electoral support

ERIC GRENIER

Honeymoons don't last forever. But that doesn't mean the love affair has to end — and the love affair Canadians are having with Justin Trudeau's Liberals appears to be enduring in the polls.

The Liberals continue to hold the new support they captured after their majority victory in last fall's federal election, when they pulled votes away from both the Conservatives and New Democrats.

Justin Trudeau's own popularity also remains high, with approval ratings well above those of both of his main rivals, interim Conservative Leader Rona Ambrose and outgoing NDP Leader Tom Mulcair, as well as the ratings he posted before last year's vote.

Over the last three months of polling, the Liberals have averaged 46.7 per cent support. That's an increase of 7.2 points over their performance in the Oct. 19 election and nearly even (up 0.1 points) from their average support during the previous quarter of federal polling calculated three months ago.

The Liberals...

The Liberals' support has held relatively steady across the board — notable considering that their polling numbers between December 2015 and February 2016 had all the hallmarks of the normal political honeymoon of a new government.

But the party has nevertheless seen further gains in some parts of the country, particularly in British Columbia. The party is up 10.3 points from the last election, leading in the province with 45.4 per cent support, and has gained 2.6 points over the last quarter alone.

The Liberals' most significant increase since the last election remains in Quebec, where the party has gained 12.2 points since the last election and sits at 47.9 per cent. That level of support is largely unchanged from where they were in the previous quarter.

In Ontario and the Prairies, the Liberals have also posted gains since both the election and the last quarter. They lead comfortably in Ontario with 50.7 per cent support and trail the Conservatives narrowly in Saskatchewan and Manitoba with 39.6 per cent.

But the Liberals may have reached a ceiling in Atlantic Canada. With 59.9 per cent support, the party is only up slightly over the 2015 election result that saw them sweep the region, and they are down 3.5 points from last quarter.

Trudeau, too, may have hit a ceiling. His average approval rating over the last three months (56.3 per cent) is down over three points from last quarter.

Perhaps the first hints that the love affair may one day sour.

The Conservatives...

The Conservatives have averaged 29.1 per cent, also unchanged from where they were in the previous quarter but down 2.8 points from the last election.

	ALBERTA	31.4% +6.9
	SASK. & MAN.	39.6% +4.9
	ONTARIO	50.7% +5.9
	QUEBEC	47.9% +12.2
	ATLANTIC CANADA	59.9% +1.2

Though the Conservatives are still polling below their standing last fall, they have nevertheless managed to hold on to the support they posted in the initial aftermath of losing power.

Since the election, the party's biggest losses have occurred in Alberta (down 4.5 points to 55.1 per cent) and in Ontario and Quebec, where the party is down 3.4 points. That puts them at 31.7 per cent in Ontario and 13.3 per cent in Quebec.

Despite the praise Stephen Harper had in his speech to the party's convention last week for the Conservatives' electoral gains in Quebec, that is one province where the party saw its support decrease for a second consecutive quarter.

But the Conservatives did see an increase over the last quarter in the province where they held that convention — the Tories were up about two points in British Columbia, to 27.2 per cent, though that is still down almost three points from the last election.

The New Democrats...

The New Democrats, after taking 19.7 per cent of the vote last fall, have averaged just 13.6 per cent support. That's down 6.1 points from the last election and one point from the previous quarter.

This most recent quarter was a difficult one for the New Democrats. Their provincial cousins lost elections in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, the latter ending almost 17 years in office, and their federal leader lost a key leadership vote and will be replaced next year.

Perhaps unsurprisingly, this coincided with a drop in Tom Mulcair's approval ratings. His average approval rating was down more than eight points from the previous quarter, to 34.3 per cent.

The party continues to poll well below its results from the last election, down more than six points on the Prairies, eight points in Quebec and almost 10 points in British Columbia. That is where the NDP saw its biggest drop in support over the last three months as well, falling 3.9 points to 16.3 per cent.

B.C. will be holding a provincial election in less than a year that the provincial NDP is hoping to win.

The Greens...

The Greens have averaged 5.1 per cent support since March, while the Bloc Québécois has averaged 4.2 per cent.

The Greens saw no significant shift in support over the last three months. The party's best results came in British Columbia, where the Greens averaged 10.1 per cent. That was down marginally over the last three months, but up about two points since the last election. Everywhere else, the Greens, who traditionally poll above their electoral results, averaged less than 7 per cent support.

The Bloc Québécois...

The Bloc Québécois averaged 16.8 per cent support in Quebec over the last three months. That is a drop of 2.6 points from the last election — the party's worst — but up 2.2 points from last quarter. ■

VIRGO

You take a very close look at your budget for one reason or another. You negotiate a group trip that allows you to experience some great adventures and make some impressive discoveries.

LIBRA

For every action there is an equal and opposite reaction, so think hard before reaching a decision. Otherwise, it could cost you dearly. Be sure to consult people around you.

SCORPIO

You are extremely intuitive. One of your dreams shows you the direction to follow if you have any doubts at all about your professional or personal life.

SAGITTARIUS

You are subjected to a form of stress that forces you to rest. You have lots of ideas for redecorating or for making other changes at home.

CAPRICORN

You are given the responsibility of organizing an event that brings together most of your friends. You find it easy to surround yourself with your loved ones, at home or elsewhere.
